OPINION AND COMMENT

A WOMAN'S BUILDING—A MAGNIFICENT OPPORTUNITY

The University of North Carolina offers to women the same opportunities in the two higher classes of the college, and in the professional schools—law, medicine, and pharmacy—that it does to men. Women who have graduated from colleges of junior college grade may enter any courses in the University for which they are qualified.

The advantages of University training will be increasingly sought by ambitious young women of the State. The reasons why those especially gifted should be properly provided for and encouraged to come are unquestionably convincing. During the past five years women have entered every school in the University. They have done uniformly excellent work.

As the means for increasing the faculty steadily during the next few years has already been provided, no obstacle exists except a proper building under adequate living conditions and supervision. Twenty-four young women have registered this year. The number will increase to fifty next year if we can give them accommodation.

This situation in regard to the higher education of women for leadership and service—and so of permanent importance to the State and to the South—I outline here in the belief that some person of insight and means will gladly seize the opportunity to give to the State and to the women of the State a Woman's Building at the University.

It is a magnificent opportunity for large and permanent service.

EDWARD K. GRAHAM, President.

THE BINGHAM BEQUEST

In these words President Graham announced to the Executive Committee of the Trustees at their regular August meeting the recent bequest of Mrs. Robert W. Bingham (Mary Lily Kenan, of Wilmington, N. C.), through which the University is to receive $75,000 income annually for twenty-one years and thereafter an amount to be invested as a permanent endowment sufficient to yield $75,000 annually.

According to the further announcement of President Graham the money is left for the purpose of strengthening the faculty through establishing a number of Kenan Professorships. Its main and ultimate object, in the language of the will, is "in the interest of the education of the youth of North Carolina."

The significance of such a large bequest given for the purposes expressed cannot be overestimated, both as it affects the State at large and the University. It goes to the very heart of public education in North Carolina. "Her method of carrying out her great thought of public service," to quote President Graham further, "is the wisest possible in a democratic state. To strengthen public institutions so that the extent and quality of their service may give to the youth of the State that equality of opportunity that equality of preparation and inspiration assures.

"With equal insight, Mrs. Bingham saw that the strength of an educational institution in rendering service of distinction depends absolutely on the strength of its faculty."

The receipt of such a great bequest becomes at once the University's greatest opportunity and very grave responsibility. It insures the strengthening of many of the present schools and departments; it makes possible the establishment of others long needed but not provided on account of lack of funds; and it vitalizes the entire life of the University at the very moment when North Carolina supremely needs the full service of every one of her educational institutions.

The gravity of the responsibility cannot be overestimated. Whatever policies are adopted must be carefully thought through and the informed opinion of administration, faculty, and alumni must be utilized in their formation. To this end THE REVIEW lays it as a duty upon every alumnus to express through conferences, letter, or these columns, any opinion which relates to the wise expansion and development of the University which the application of the bequest involves.

"Put Carolina in Your Will," and "Subscribe to the Alumni Loyalty Fund" are alumni slogans scarcely two years old. Nevertheless, the fact that they are proving effective in the work of making Carolina the great University she is to be, is seen in three wills written since they were adopted. Through the will of J. H. Hewitt, '99, the University received $20,000 to $25,000, the annual income from which is now being applied in loans to students. The Bingham bequest, representing an endowment of from $1,250,000 to $1,500,000, awaits proper assimilation. The third, small as to amount, but infinitely fine in the spirit out of which it grew, is that of a Carolina man who has but recently set foot "somewhere in France." Whether he returns or not he has included in his will $100 for the Alumni Loyalty Fund.

Have you "done your bit," either by putting Carolina in yourself or interesting your friend, not an alumnus, but who has means, or by sending your contribution direct to the treasurer of the Loyalty Fund?

Through the press notices of mid-September announcement was made of the appointment of Mrs. T. W. Lingle, formerly President of the State Federation of Women's Clubs, as Advisor to Women in the University and assistant in the Bureau of Extension in bringing the University into more direct service to the women of the State.

The presence of twenty-four women students on the campus brings home the fact that Carolina is yearly appealing to a larger number of women. During the past few years the number in the higher classes has steadily increased, and the professional departments of Law, Medicine, and Pharmacy have also enrolled an increasing number of women.

Through the Bureau of Extension many local women's clubs have been reached and at present more than 425 members of these clubs are enrolled in special reading and study circles under the special direction of the department of correspondence study.

This growth of service to North Carolina women has been one of the most important developments of the University's work, and the University and the State are to be congratulated in that Mrs. Lingle has been appointed to extend the service further.

In one of the earlier issues of the year THE REVIEW outlined a program or platform of fifteen things to be done by the alumni (or friends whom they could interest) for the University. At this time it desires to add a new plank—plank sixteen—a woman's building.

During the past two summers more than 750 women teachers have spent six weeks upon the campus. This year 24 women students are enrolled, and work with members of the women's clubs of the State is being prosecuted by the correspondence department. In all of its phases this work is highly significant—so significant, in fact, that a woman's building, complete in every detail and adequate to the requirements which would properly be made of it, is an immediate and imperative need.

President Graham is asking who will give it. THE REVIEW awaits the response.

Elsewhere in this issue appears a long list of alumni and students who left the University last year who are engaged in some sort of military service. It is by no means complete, but it is sufficient to indicate the fact that wherever duty has called Carolina men have gone.

ADVISOR TO WOMEN STUDENTS

WHAT DO YOU SUGGEST?

PUTTING CAROLINA IN

PLANK SIXTEEN

CAROLINA MEN IN ARMS

The presence of some 500 of the present student body in uniform drilling at 7:45 A. M. three mornings each week and at such other hours as are required, and that too without thought of the ease usually associated with campus life, signifies that the same spirit reigns here beneath the campus oaks.

The following letter from a recent alumnus to President Graham speaks eloquently of the same impelling spirit. It was written on the eve of departure to join General Pershing's expeditionary force in France and it breathes of the fine sense of duty to ideals which Carolina expects of every one of her sons:

I am about to leave for France, aware what going there means, and glad to go. Before I go I want to send my love to you and Carolina, because you two both send me and at the same time make me hate to go. You send me because you have taught me ideals that won't let me stay here. You make me hate to go, because I cherish you with the same love I bear my parents. I am not a single-purposed man; if I have one dominant desire I don't recognize it. But the resultant of all my desires to live and serve is a purpose to fit myself to come back and serve through Carolina. This purpose I have of course subordinated to what the army may require of me until peace is won. But I am fighting to stop Germany and not for the joy of fighting. I hate war and its whole stupid machinery as much as I love its opposite, the free, creative, life of Carolina. I don't intend to run from the fact that war is wrong any more than I intend to run from war itself because it is painful.

Therefore, while I am glad to serve in this war, I still maintain that peace is right and that it must be developed by training and organizing man for peace even better than he is now trained and organized for war. Carolina has the spirit to do this. . . . May you both live long and prosper.

For Carolina the new year has begun most auspiciously. Contrary to expectation entertained by many, the registration on October first showed only a small falling off from the high record of last year, 1034 students being enrolled on that date. This loss, in attendance, when compared with that of other colleges for men in this State, is proportionally the smallest on record, and it compares most favorably with the registration of leading colleges in other states. The falling off has, as was to be expected, principally affected the professional schools, the graduate school, and the higher classes. But new men have crowded into the lower classes and the freshmen are here in greater number than ever before. Alumni throughout the State evidently did fine work in impressing prospective students with the importance of going to college.

The outstanding feature of the new year, quite naturally, is the military training. Without one hitch the officers in charge have put this branch of activity in perfect running order, and the student body, with a remarkable singleness of purpose, has settled down to the schedule which military training imposes.

If you will permit the saying, things on the campus are "going fine," so fine in fact, that a visit to the campus will give you a new conception of the Carolina spirit working under new conditions and, incidentally, it will inspire you. Come and see for yourself that the beginning is fine.

All of us remember—more or less accurately—what Shakespeare had to say about names when he was discoursing upon the same. But WHAT'S IN A NAME? in spite of the finality of that discourse THE REVIEW wishes to note that through the Mary's the University has been more thoughtfully considered than by any other, and consequently it holds that name in special esteem. Its largest bequests have come from the following: Mary Ann Smith, Mary Elizabeth Mason, Mary Ruffin Smith, Mary Bryan Speight, and Mary Lily Kenan.

FACULTY ADDITIONS

The following new members have been added to the faculty since last year:

Dr. J. M. Booker returns after a year's leave of absence and resumes his work as associate professor of English. Dr. A. W. Hobbs (Harvard) becomes instructor in Mathematics. Mr. T. E. Didlake (Virginia), of Charlotte, becomes assistant professor of Law. Mr. L. P. Brown (Harvard) becomes instructor in French. Mr. S. A. Leavitt (Harvard) becomes assistant professor of French. Mr. B. Markham (Carolina), of Durham, becomes instructor in Zoology. Mr. H. M. Sharp (Chicago) becomes instructor in Physics. Mr. W. F. Morrison becomes assistant in Drawing.

DR. BOOKER MARRIES

The marriage of Miss Nell Battle and Dr. John M. Booker, Associate Professor of English in the University, occurred October 2nd in Montgomery, Alabama. Dr. Booker has returned to the University this fall after a year's leave of absence. Mrs. Booker is the daughter of Dr. H. B. Battle, '81, and the granddaughter of Dr. K. P. Battle, '49.

THE UNIVERSITY OPENS

The One Hundred and Twenty-Third Year Begins Under Auspicious Circumstances—Dean Stacy and President Graham Speak at Formal Opening

The formal opening of the University for the 123rd year occurred in Memorial Hall at noon on Thursday, September 13th. The number of students enrolled at this time was 976.

The invocation was offered by Rev. W. D. Moss, of the Presbyterian Church, and addresses were made by Dean Stacy and President Graham. Dean Stacy discussed the relation which the life of the University held to the nation. He pointed out that hitherto the University had existed as a community practically independent and uninfluenced, but that now the University must think in terms of world thought and govern its course by the needs of the country. The University student should this year make every effort to perform his tasks efficiently and well and to conserve his resources and improve his powers by a careful conservation of time and an economical mode of living.

President Graham after recounting the changes in the faculty and commenting briefly on the suspension of intercollegiate football for the season and the taking up of military training, spoke as follows:

President Graham's Address

I speak to you briefly on behalf of the University, and my first word for her is a simple word of complete and hearty welcome, and of grateful happiness that henceforth she is to be truly the mother of you all, united through her in a common high interest and purpose, and also through her drawn into fellowship with that gallant company of men who for a century and a quarter have preceded you here.

For the University, these first formal moments of opening are always moments of her greatest happiness, because they mark the birth of a new generation of University men, with renewed assurances of the precious loyalties and affection that grow out of the association. It is a natural and altogether worthy impulse to open one's heart wholly to the fine feeling of comradeship that draws us together, and to give our mind, for a moment or two, to its meaning—perhaps to define for the present year what that meaning is, in the especial interests that should now enlist the loyalties of men who are the heirs of great traditions.

The attempt to discover just where in our present time and place we stand—always important and sometimes interesting—is especially important this year. Just how critical the particular point of light is that falls on the young men of this year of grace 1917, I hardly dare attempt to say. . . . When Destiny focuses on the hour in which one chances to come into the full strength of youth, the most terrific impact of destruction that history has ever known, or can know, nature mercifully withholds from us the imagination to conceive it. You are perhaps too acutely conscious of the change to submit to a description of it. I am talking to men who for three years have heard the devastating storm of a world in arms grow steadily closer and closer, and have finally seen it break, terrible but not unwelcome, over their own homes, and into the seclusion of this quiet place. Life has been transformed from a pleasantly far off future of your own choosing to a present made grimly terrible by a job of death that desperately cries for all the disciplined manhood and resources that the world can muster.

At such a time for us to meet here in the shade of these trees, to take up the old studies in the same old way of pleasantness and peace, would seem unworthy and even grotesque. Odd if for us old things in some deep, true way did not become new. If under such compelling summons the University spirit and your spirit here were still the same, you might resent it with all the ardor of your soul. But we know that—whether yet directed to any real end of helpfulness or not—we know that our attitude is not the same. For even the most thoughtless—(I hope you will be quietly testing in your own mind what I am saying)—there is in the place of listlessness, slackness, and indifference, a desire, however vague, to play a man's part in a man's world; even to the most vacant mind, a strong inner voice of awakened mastery, calling, though the direction may be as yet undefined. Not in vain has the world been echoing these three years with the tramp of men who march to death, and gladly “ pour out the red,

Sweet wine of youth; give up the years to be;
Of work and joy, and that unhopd serene,
That men call age.”

Great issues and the scent of heroism and of fellowship with it, and with its vision and its sacrifice fill the mind and heart, and call the will of every true man to some sort of resolution that shall take the form of action. The world is aflame, not merely with the destruction and the anguish of war, but aflame, too, with a new purpose and luminous with a great new hope.

With all of these aspirations this immortal mother of yours is in full understanding and sympathy. Your vision is her vision. Her tempered wisdom looks at the world through the eager eyes and ardent hopes of you, her present sons—and she is as you would have her, “young as the age in which she lives, fresh as the year of grace in which you come to her, new as all the forces now blowing across the face of the world—running ahead, and showing us the way, with the light lifted high, shining on the path beyond.”

So when the call of this great war came, in her quick and eager response, she was first among the first. Three hundred and more of her sons hurried to the first training camps, and for every service since men who have sat where you sit now were quick to volunteer.

It has always been so. It is the logic of her life and history. The first thing that caught your eye here was the bronze figure of the young soldier in the center of the campus in memory of the great company of young men who left this place desolate in the 60's, and “joyfully,” as has been said, “stormed at all the thousand doors that lead to death.” In that great conflict no institution, on either side of the line, gave a larger per cent of its students. Mr. Connor told the wonderful story here this summer. Yale gave 25 per cent; Virginia, 25; North Carolina, 40, and of its younger alumni, 55.6 per cent. The whole student body pressed into service, and, as one historian states, “rushed into the struggle like men bidden to a marriage feast.” Mr. Connor tells, too, the thrilling tale of how at Gettysburg Colonel Isaac Avery, a member of the class of 1847, led General Hoke's brigade across an open field, captured 100 prisoners and four standards, but was himself killed. Struck down while cheering on his men, he lived long enough to write on an envelope, crimson with his blood, this message: “Tell my father I died with my face to the foe.”

This message, a transcript from the heart of the University through one of her sons, was shown to Ambassador James Bryce. He looked at it and said: “It is the message of our race to the world.” And it is the message and the spirit of the race of men who “would be free or die,” given to you through the University today.

Your Alma Mater does not say to you that you are here in her sheltering care to save yourselves while others die, nor because you are too good for the trenches, nor that you are in preparation here for jobs that death will soon make vacant. If she did, you might well be resentfully impatient, and decline to let your strength wither in playing so empty a role.

The University holds no such negative view of what we are called upon to be and do here during the next nine months. Our part, if truly conceived and heroically done, is as important, and I dare say as difficult, as that of the men in the trenches. In fact, the vision that they gladly die for, is simply this life of freedom left in trust to us, as trustees of the world's greatest vision, while they fight for its full preservation. The faith for which the world is now being tested out in a crucible of fire is the faith that with the right to live freely, men will live rightly; that with a free choice between the inferior and the superior, free men will choose the better way; and that knowledge and power to choose rightly in any activity, and the continuous purpose to carry out the choice, comes from within. True sovereignty ultimately is within the individual man, or nowhere.

This vision, which is the central impulse and guide of all permanent progress, did not come first to men in August, 1914, nor April, 1917; but because in 1914 a powerful nation, through faith in another great and fatally antagonistic idea, perfected in the discipline of autocratic power and efficient organization, threatened the concept of freedom that we hold in common with the free spirit of half the world, we threw all of our resources of life and treasure into the struggle, that “government of the people and for the people should not perish from the earth.” This issue of freedom is the only issue in this immediate and terrible task of those who “would be free or die.” And the simple point that I would give emphasis to now is that the essential and ultimate victory against autocracy is not this victory against Germany—immediately necessary as that is. The essential victory is not for democracy in government merely. Government exists, not as an end in itself, but to make right conditions for right living. The essential and ultimate fight is for that method of living that will produce the best life; and justification by practice of that declaration of democracy that the best way is the self-directed way, and not the way of outside force, however enlightened: of divine right of family, or caste, or might—militaristic or otherwise. This war has summoned into super-human effort all of the energies of men, as the President has said in his definitive phrase, simply to “make the world safe” for that ultimate experiment—to carry on without interference the experiment of disciplining ourselves, and so disciplining ourselves that we will achieve the most abundant physical, mental, and spiritual life. That is the ultimate fight—whether men can discipline themselves—and that is the fight that is to test the vision of freedom that has led men through the centuries to fight and fail and fight on, and gladly, if they still might pass on the torch, “die with their face to the foe.” And that ultimate task and supreme experiment is what is left with us here for these nine months, as trustees of freedom to try out under conditions practically ideal.

As a matter of actual belief and working faith, a great many men in this country—(in this town and in this hall, no doubt)—believe that this experiment is destined to failure, for the reason that men are not capable of self-discipline,—that they never have been strong enough for it, and never will be. The autocracy of foes within—indolence, trivial self-indulgence,—grenade attacks in the form of Coca-Colas and countless cigarettes, gas attacks from loafing enemy-friends, night attacks from the movies and trips to Durham—the host of petty enemies in the day's battle line have often been too strong for the self-governing average man. Certainly it is easier for some men to charge through barbed wire on the cold steel of German bayonets than to crawl out of a warm bed on a February morning to attend a first hour Math. class. Yet the whole problem of democratic civilization is symbolized in this test of whether when the obviously right thing to do presents itself, the intelligent free man will choose it, and be strong enough to do it. We are fighting Germany for the privilege of staying in bed if we want to; but the victory of democracy will not be won unless when we win the right to stay in bed we choose to get up, when it's best to do it.

I suspect that in the severe self-appraisal through which the world has been forced in the past three years, the discipline of militaristic compulsion of Germany has superficially won more converts as a practical scheme of effective living than our method of democratic freedom.

I remember hearing not long ago a distinguished college president say that "there are but two kinds of discipline,—military discipline and no discipline." He meant that however safe the world might be for democracy, democracy was not safe for college men.

I had a letter the other day from the father of an entering student, asking if we were to have enough military work here to make a man of his son. He meant, if I may irreverently put it so, to ask if we were to so tie him to tasks that he would be deprived of the inalienable right of every free man to make a fool of himself. In his judgment this young man is not a fit trustee for democracy's vision.

We should frankly face and confess our failures not know whether I can stand it, and whether I can win my commission; but I do know it's making a man of me. I've always wanted to see if I could do in the past, as we grapple with the task we mean to undertake. Our men at Oglethorpe repeatedly wrote to me this summer: "this work is hard. I do it." Under compulsion they subordinated all of those petty indulgences and weak complaints that had hitherto dominated their aspirations to lead a clean, clear-cut, masterful and purposeful life.

They meant that they were forced to correct those deficiencies that they had previously been too weak to prevent, as pointed out in the letter of General McCain, commenting on the failure of men in the training camps.

That is what the world wants, whether in the army, in athletics, in business, or in scholarship: absence of slouchiness, mental and physical slackness, indifference in thought and bearing, content with second rateness. To win that is to win the fine, heroic, fight that falls to us.

But "to walk and carry oneself in all things with the bearing of a gentleman" means to walk self-supported, without braces. The absolutism of militaristic Germany does not give what we have failed to get. General Pershing said that he hoped the American army training camps would somehow preserve that invaluable quality of initiative and self-confidence that American college men get in football training. The self-imposed discipline and sportsmanship of the athletic field for the joy of the game is something like it,—the relentless regularity and reliability of a machine, combined with the infinitely varied capacities of the individual spirit: the organized discipline of Germany and the soul of France. That is the vision of freedom that it is not visionary to expect to dominate an American university campus in the year 1917. And that is the vision and the practice that must dominate our campus if we are to be faithful to the sacred trust committed to us. Surely if this reveille of the spirit that has stirred the wide world to endure mangled bodies that we might still be strong to carry the message on; sightless eyes that we might still follow the light; death in its most hideous forms that we might live more abundantly—surely at such a time for a man not to raise his energies to their highest power for the part of the great job assigned to him is to be a slacker of the most despicable type. There is no room in this or any other vital institution in the world today for neutrality in this high endeavor. To be a loafer today is to be not only disloyal to our country, but to commit the unpardonable sin of being a traitor to life itself. In this supreme experiment of freedom, we need for our part the same exultant determination that stayed with Avery to the death.

Does the University have too much faith in you when it commits this vision of democracy into your keeping? I have another letter on my desk in which the father of one of you says: "Do not these University students have too much freedom?" To that, the University answers that it has no faith not based on full, complete, wholehearted faith in her sons. That faith is her life as it is the life of the world. And as it knows they would face death in a righteous cause with gladness; so it would have them face exactions of a disciplined life of freedom—not solemnly, but as a race of confident, upstanding, masterful, happy men—who know how to live an ordinary life in an extraordinary way, filled with that heroism for the daily task that marks the only true chivalry—the chivalry of the spirit. There is every reason why such men should go into the great fight for self-disciplined freedom like the minstrel of old—with a song of victory on their lips. This is that "league of honor, that partnership of opinion of which the President spoke in April, through which a free people, and only a free people, can hold their purpose steady to a common end not only in their own interest but in the interest of all mankind."

THE UNIVERSITY RECEIVES A MAGNIFICENT BEQUEST

In accordance with the terms of the will of Mrs. Robert Worth Bingham (Mary Lily Kenan, of Wilmington, N. C.) whose death occurred July 27th in Louisville, Ky., the University is to receive the sum of $75,000 annually for twenty-one years, and at the end of that time, a sufficient sum to yield that annual amount permanently. The principal fund to be received is estimated at between a million and a quarter and a million and a half dollars.

President Graham reported the bequest in these words to the executive committee of the board of trustees at their regular August meeting:

"A noble benefaction, splendidly conceived and executed in a manner worthy of the generous hearted, patriotic woman who gave it, of the great State for whose use it was devised, of the institution through which its wide benefits are to be forever derived, and of the splendid family in whose name it is given.

"The money is left for the purpose of strengthening the faculty, through establishing a number of Kenan Professorships. Its main and ultimate object, in the language of the will, is 'in the interest of the education of the youth of North Carolina.'

"Mrs. Bingham's thought was essentially patriotic. She was a loyal and devoted daughter of the State, and since childhood had been deeply interested in the University.

"Her method of carrying out her great thought of public service is the wisest possible in a democratic state: To strengthen public institutions, so that the extent and quality of their service may give to the youth of the State that equality of opportunity that equality of preparation and inspiration assures.

"With equal insight, Mrs. Bingham saw that the strength of an educational institution in rendering service of distinction depends absolutely on the strength of its faculty. That is the heart of the whole matter.

"To carry out effectively her great idea of giving to the youth of the State the instruction of as gifted a body of teachers as possible, and to the State itself a permanent group of scholars and students of State life, Mrs. Bingham realized that a sum of money must be set aside commensurate with the size and importance of the project. No plan of public service could be larger in concept and purpose.

"The Kenans have taken an active part in the University history since the first James Kenan was one of its earliest Trustees. The men whose names it commemorates are men who have long been loved and honored in North Carolina: William R. Kenan, James G. Kenan, and Thomas S. Kenan, all were graduates of the University. Thomas S. and William R. Kenan were for many years Trustees. William R. Kenan, Jr., one of the executors of the will, is an alumnus. Graham Kenan is an alumnus and a trustee."

More Than Five Hundred Alumni are Enrolled in Military Branches
In Service of the Nation

The roster of Carolina's sons enrolled in the military branches of the government shows Alma Mater to be splendidly represented in the nation's service. More than five hundred alumni are in military and naval service of the United States and officers training camps. The University was represented during the past spring and summer by alumni in every training camp in the country. More than two hundred alumni received commissions ranging from second lieutenantcies to captaincies and are now stationed at the various cantonments of the National Army, and at other army posts.

The list of Carolina men in military and naval service includes one brigadier-general, General Geo. W. McIver, of the class of 1873, who commands the 161st Infantry Brigade at Camp Jackson, S. C.; 4 colonels; 4 lieutenant-colonels; 18 majors; 32 captains; 38 first lieutenants; 192 second lieutenants; 7 lieutenant-commanders (navy); 6 lieutenants (navy); one chaplain (navy); one midshipman (navy); 3 ensigns (navy); 2 acting assistant surgeons (navy); 3 passed assistant surgeons (navy); 1 medical director (navy); 25 members Medical Reserve Corps; 114 alumni in other branches of service. One hundred and fourteen alumni are in the second officers training camps. Two are in Army Y. M. C. A. work, Rev. F. B. Rankin, '01, at Camp Jackson, Columbia, S. C.; and J. T. Larkin, '12, who is now in France.

Officers

The list of alumni who hold commissioned offices in military and naval service of the United States as given herewith, is as nearly complete as it has been possible to make it from an examination of all available records. However, it is probable that this list does not include all of the University alumni holding commissions, and THE REVIEW would like to be informed of any additions which should be made to it. THE UNIVERSITY IN LETTERS

At a time when the aims and ideals of America are being studied as never before, such a volume as "American Ideals," edited by Professor Norman Foerster of the English Department, and Professor W. W. Pierson, Jr., of the History Department, of the University, and published by the Houghton Mifflin Company, seems particularly appropriate. The prominence of the United States in the present world crisis has served to draw the attention of thoughtful people in this country and abroad to its present spirit and its past traditions, as embodied in the utterances of its great statesmen and men of letters. The editors have brought together in one volume of 326 pages the best of these important utterances on American life and citizenship, selections which give evidence of "a marked nobility of will and mind."

"It is the function of this little book," the preface states, "to bring together certain essays, addresses and state papers that express, from the point of view of American statesmen and men of letters, these ideals past and present. A final chapter of "Foreign Opinion of the United States" regards a few of the same subjects from an interestingly different angle."

These selections cover a wide field, extending from Patrick Henry's Liberty Speech to President Wilson's War Message. There are 36 selections in the volume, grouped under the following heads: I. Liberty and Union; II. State and Nation; III. American Democracy; IV. American Foreign Policy; V. Foreign Opinion of the United States.

The selections are arranged conveniently for study, and are especially adapted to classes in English composition, American history or American literature.

Contemporary thought is well represented; four of President Wilson's speeches find a place. This volume is also well suited to the work of study clubs, extension courses and the like. These selections, so well made out of a large field of material, are sure to develop a more intelligent patriotism and pride in the fundamental doctrines of American life. The book should also find wide sale abroad, where there is an awakening interest just now in America and all that it stands for.

SUMMER SCHOOL HOLDS SUCCESSFUL SESSION

The 30th session of the University Summer School which extended from June 13th until July 27th proved to be the best in its history. The entire session was characterized by the amount of serious, thoughtful work done. More than 80 per cent of the students came for the six weeks course and remained through the examinations. Two hundred and twenty-one students took work leading to college credit and 57 took work leading to degrees in the graduate department.

The statistics of registration show that 92 counties of the State were represented. Only 8 counties, Alexander, Clay, Graham, Jackson, Mitchell, Onslow, Transylvania, and Tyrrell had no representatives. The total attendance was 901. The students were divided according to types of courses as follows: Normal 473, college credit 221, graduate studies 57, college entrance 17, special 15, institute attendants 124. Graduates of colleges or normal schools numbered 247.

MILITARY TRAINING INAUGURATED

The University has this year inaugurated military training in its courses of instruction and nearly 500 students have registered for the course and are taking it regularly.

Captain J. Stuart Allen, a Canadian officer, is at the head of the military work. Captain Allen is a McGill University man who went to France early in 1915, served first with the Royal Fusiliers and then with Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry. He went through many of the famous battles of 1915 and saw a great deal of trench warfare, was wounded twice and sent home in February.

Captain Allen is assisted by Lieutenant Jonathan Leonard, of the Harvard Officers' Reserve Training Corps, a graduate of Harvard and formerly instructor there. Lieutenant Leonard made a study of military training in colleges the past year under the French officers stationed at Harvard. Mr. J. V. Whitfield, of the class of 1915, formerly Commandant at Horner's, is doing graduate work in the University and is assisting in the military instruction.

ATHLETICS

The military situation and the length of time necessary for drill made it necessary that the varsity football schedule be cancelled for this season. The decision to have no varsity football this fall was arrived at by the University authorities and the athletic management after they had considered the matter carefully. It was felt that the University could not fulfill her entire duty in the light of the present national and international situation and also carry on her regular football schedule at the same time.

Athletics have not at all been abandoned, however, for the year and will be pushed vigorously in all lines except varsity football. Football practice for the Freshman team began in September and more than 60 men reported at the outset. A schedule has been arranged for the Freshman team by Graduate Manager Woollen. All of the classes will be represented by teams and much emphasis will be placed upon the inter-class struggle for the championship.

Money for Education

Many young men and women secure money for their education through life insurance. President Garfield was a notable example. All through his conspicuous career he paid frequent and high tribute to the New York Life Policy on which he borrowed money that put him through college and started him on the road to success. New York Life policies in addition to the usual provisions, *provide free insur-
